Cooking

On the rare occasion that Nancy spends the night at the Byers', she slips out of bed early. She's always careful not to disturb a sleeping Jonathan as she disentangles herself from beneath his heavy limbs. She'll throw on one of Jonathan's t-shirts and make her way to the kitchen, always taking one extra long stride over the still barely there stain in the Byers' hallway. They had hauled up the carpet long ago but the floorboards still bore the scars of that night.

Joyce leaves early for work on Saturday mornings. Nancy likes it that way; An uninterrupted hour in which she is able to whisk eggs, sift flour and allow her brain to switch off, just for a little while. Nancy loves to cook, especially breakfast and especially for Jonathan. The first time she had made Jonathan pancakes he had seemed puzzled, suspicious even. His brow knit together and lips pursed "I didn't know you could cook." he had stated.

"I'm full of surprises, Byers." she had replied, spearing a fork in to the top of his pancakes. "Dig in."
